Clinical supervision provides seasoned therapists with the opportunity to broaden the number of clients' lives they touch as well as shape future generations of therapists. Much like with therapy, developing supervision skills requires intentionality and experience. In addition, supervisors take on a tremendous amount of responsibility as they become liable for the actions of pre-licensed counselors. This training offers clinical supervisors (and those who are contemplating becoming supervisors) guidance in ethics, techniques and practical concerns related to guiding new clinicians.

Michelle Pruett is a licensed professional counselor and supervisor (LPC-S) and the owner of Pruett Counseling and Consulting, LLC in Mountain Brook, Alabama. Ms. Pruett has more than 20 years' experience providing Crisis Intervention and Child, Family, and Couples therapy. Combined, these experiences evolved into her current work with trauma survivors of all ages. Specialized trainings she has completed include: Trust Based Relational Intervention (TBRI), Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing (EMDR), Dyadic Developmental Psychotherapy (DDP) and Emotionally Focused Therapy (EFT).

Workshop Objectives:

- Participants will compare a variety of endorsed supervision models and their defining characteristics.
- Participants will identify ethical concerns pertinent to the supervisor-supervisee relationship.
- Participants will plan practical steps to include in supervision to ensure a thorough and well-rounded experience for the supervisee.
- Participants will recognize signs that increased intervention is needed to ensure the well-being of supervisees and their client population.
